

Jump the River

To play “Jump the River,” set up two jump ropes on the ground at a distance apart to serve as the “river.” You can also use tape lines or other boundaries to make the river. The goal of the game is to get across the river without touching the river. The boundaries should be made close enough that children can jump across, but far enough apart that they can’t just step across. One at a time, each player should jump across the river. Continue playing until each player has crossed the river.

Provided by NC EFNEP, a Cooperative Extension program